PROFILE

Chris Plaisted has been creating monumental sculpture for almost a decade. His sculptures juxtapose the elements of steel, copper, wood, concrete, and other metals. He draws inspiration from people, places, bridges, ships, architecture, and various mythological and historical elements. His work has been purchased for fine homes throughout the world and has appeared in dozens of local galleries, and several large-scale outdoor shows throughout the United States. It is primarily abstract, but often includes figurative elements that tend to focus on forms of conflict. Chris also maintains a 20-year career as a graphic designer, continuing his true passion for painting and sculpture as well. He currently resides with a studio and workshop in New Milford, CT with his wife, two children, and Leonidas the bearded dragon.
